Life of a Director Is Not a Bed of Roses, Ince Declares

In reciting the author's point of view of the peculiar methods of the production or photoplays some stress was laid on the fact that everything that was done was done as the director saw fit to do it without regard to the actors or actresses. The director is the sole umpire in a motion picture production. Likewise he is the entire audience, so far as the actors and actresses are concerned. All they are required to do is what he tells them, and the satisfaction he shows with their doing what he tells them is all the appliance they can hope to get. The director is frequently, as was pointed out, the only man who knows anything about the play that is being produced, and he frequently keeps his knowledge strictly to himself.

Among the directors of pictures probably the most pre-eminent, after Griffith, is Thomas H. Ince, who has been referred to several times before in these columns. Ince is a director of directors, and so highly is he regarded by the producing managers generally that he is borrowed on special occasions from the New York Motion Picture Corporation, which claims him as its own, to produce pictures for other corpoto produce pictures for other corporations. Ince believes that the director of a big feature picture has a lot of troubles that nobody can appreciate the company of the corporation of lot of troubles that nobody can appreciate.

"Few Jaymen are aware of the innumerable difficulties that beset the producer in getting out a feature film," he states in a brief article on the subject in the Dramatic Mirror.

"Take The Sign of the Rose: as a fair example of producing difficulties. This feature was written by George Beban and played by him with remarkable success on the vaudeville stage. Beban appears in the leading role on the film which has just been completed.

"George is a most capital fellow,

"George is a most capital fellow, but he is as temperamental as a saliboat in the doldrums. He bristles with art-fibers which vibrate on the slightest discordant note. line the crowd up in front of the box office and whose synonym for temperament is receipts.

'In producing a feature the 'crowd' picture is invariably the hardest to secure. First, the important characters in the role must be to the fore. Then, again, there may be a bit of superb acting in the foreground and some farcical stuff being parceled out in the background. All this must come under the director's vision and the characters so disposed as to meet the requirements of mechanics and photography.

'In 'The Sign of the Rose,' where there is an excited, surging crowd the difficulty lay not with the principal players, but with those engaged in the superficial parts. For example, it was very difficult to convince the crowd that it should be an excited, surging, crowding crowd; and it was doubly difficult to convince cited, surging, crowding crowd: and it was doubly difficult to convince the policeman of his duty of forcing the crowd back like the dutiful New York policeman of the East Side should. It was necessary to change policemen five times in order to secure a good specimen of near-cop, and the crowd rehearsed one scene alone at least twenty-four times before it could be worked up to that pitch of excitement which called for the camera man."

Chevy Chase is about to witness a sure-enough contest. The stake is an office with neither a big salary nor much honor, but that is cutting no figure with the contestants. The position is that of Democratic county committeeman for the Second precinct of Bethesda district, where Practically all of the voters live.

B. Ashby Leavell, the present committeeman, is seeking re-election, and E. N. McLaughlin has announced his purpose of trying for the place. Both are known as scrappers.
